

Any law that fails to protect every child is a crime.

Senate Bill 143 is bad law. If it were to pass, public entities, including public schools, would be far less accountable than religious and other private organizations for sexual abuses committed by their employees. Simply put, it would create a double standard in Colorado.

Ultimately, the passage of Bill 143 would invite unequal protection and speculative litigation, not to mention a host of out-of-state trial attorneys and special interest groups to take advantage of such a poorly written law. How can this be?
